The Journal of Computational Chemistry (ISSN: 0192–8651) is published quarterly, one volume per year, by John Wiley & Sons.

The journal publishes articles concerned with all aspects of computational chemistry: organic, inorganic, physical, or biological. Other work, such as experimental or theoretical work, may be reported provided the emphasis is computational in nature.

Only work of recognized scientific quality is accepted for publication, and papers are refereed to insure that such standards are met. In general, the computations are at or near the "state of the art" limit available for the particular work at hand. Thus for studies on molecules containing only a few first row atoms, calculations approaching the Hartree–Fock limit, or perhaps even post-Hartree–Fock calculations, are expected. For larger molecules, where such detailed calculations are prohibitively expensive, or for studies involving reaction surfaces, for example, semi-empirical methods such as MINDO/3 would be appropriate.

Molecular mechanics calculations would be the method of choice for many molecular problems for which the necessary empirical data exist.

Statistical mechanics calculations, Monte Carlo calculations, computer assisted organic synthesis, and most other kinds of chemical calculations are also suitable topics.
